

virginia v. black (2003)

true threats are when a “speaker means to communicate a serious expression of an intent to commit an act of unlawful violence.”

intimidation is when a speaker directs a threat to a person or group of persons with the intent of placing the victim in fear of bodily harm or death.”

take the yellow pill:
threats and intimidation are not protected by the first amendment.

do not stand for censorship of that which is not truly threatening or intimidating.
